

This Obituary was provided by Bob Wagner, Lois's son.

Lois Rae Carlson passed away in Chicago, USA on April 1 2017, aged 66.

Born in Minnesota, Lois moved to Canberra with her family in the late 1960s for her father's posting as Defence Attaché for the United States Air Force – a significant role given Australia's involvement in the Vietnam War at that time. Both she and her brother Rollie attended Telopea Park High School.

When Lois returned to the US she eventually settled in Wisconsin with her husband Donald Spies. After his death in 1990 she moved to Chicago, first of all the northern suburbs and later downtown. She married Michael Lem in 2005.

Lois was a Christian Science practitioner for more than 40 years. She worked in her own practice, helping individuals who sought spiritual healing as well as teaching and lecturing all over the United States.

She wrote extensively on spiritual topics, including many articles for the Christian Science Monitor newspaper. She touched many, many lives and while her sudden passing has been cause of enormous grief and sadness it has also brought much testament to and thankfulness for her great and many kindnesses, wisdom, love of people and love of God.

Lois knew no other way to approach life other than with great passion for all that she did. Half-heartedness was foreign to her; enthusiasm and gladness are words that will always be easily associated with her. Grateful for the smallest of life's blessings, she epitomised the word 'thankfulness'.

Lois loved living in Chicago. For all of the delight of her travels she was happiest at home with Michael enjoying the vibrancy of the city, the diversity of people, the music (jazz and the symphony in particular), and the beauty of the lake surrounds.

Just a week before she died Lois was in California, where she gave what was to be her final lecture, her definitive address that had been given many times across the country: 'The healing power of unselfishness'. The title could not have been more appropriate as part of her epitaph; her life was one punctuated with personal testimony of what she was teaching. Colloquially, she 'walked the talk'.

Upon her return to Chicago Lois fell suddenly and unexpectedly ill and passed away peacefully a few days later.

She is survived by her husband Michael, brothers Steve and Rollie, sons Bob, Soren and Skander and four grandchildren.

Richard Swan remembers:

Lois was the exotic American girl who joined Telopea before 5th form. She had boundless energy and was much more outspoken than many of the other Telopea young women. In early 1967, height of student unrest, we were campaigning for great representation from student. The Headmaster, McPherson, agreed to the formation of a "student council". It was decided that we needed a 'constitution'.

Lois invited me to her house, in Deakin, one afternoon. Her first approach was to propose the US Constitution as a model. She got out the Encyclopedia Britannica to a section on the constitution. While the US Constitution was inspirational, it was very hard to directly map it for a student council. In the end we developed a one page, typed, constitution which covered basics like appointments to the council, meetings, etc. We presented it to Mr. McPherson the next day.

Ian Barnes remembers a historic day at the Head of the Lake

My memory of Lois echo's some of the same character traits recalled by Richard - and I am sure is a memory that many others will also recall.

At the Head of the Lake rowing regatta in 1998 TPHS managed to get out a sizable level of support to cheer on the Telopea eight. This included Lois arriving at the lake in her [diplomatic plated?] car, on the side of which she had painted, in big coloured letters,

'I'm rooting for Telopea Park'

Sometime during the day the local cops showed up and I can still remember the look of feigned horror on Lois's face as she explained to the cop that in America 'rooting' meant 'cheering' and of course had she known what it meant in Australia .....

She tried in vain to convince the cop of her innocence but I think I am right in remembering that, eventually, she was forced to wash the offending message off.
